Enhance girls' and young women's inclusion with the support of the community

ENHANCE brings together 7 organisations from EU (CY, IT, NMK) and NON-EU (Jordan, Morocco, Egypt) countries to tackle gender inequality and discrimination, by offering a new training opportunity for NGOs operators.

The project focuses on building partners' capacity to put barriers and address stereotypes that lead to gender inequality in their communities.

Tackle gender inequality and discrimination, by offering new up-to-date non-formal education innovative methods and resources to ultimately foster a positive systemic change in their communities.

Capacity building for NGOs operators

About project management and impact

TRAIN THE TRAINERS IN TORINO - ITALY 22ND AND

FRAMEWORK organized the 1st workshop to equip partners' managers with project management skills and the ability to work in our multicultural team. The training lasted 2 days, and has been effective to boost our team's ability to plan and monitor project's activities and motivate and engage with stakeholders.

Valeria and Tawfiq from FRAMEWORK presented topics as Project lifecycle, monitoring and evaluation, plan for sustainability, teamwork and cooperation.

Nusret from Eunoia introduced the partners to dissemination and visibility in EUropean projects. At the end of the training, partners planned the project's next steps together.

LOCAL ACTIVITIES IN MOROCCO

ATIG conducted local training on June 28, 2025. Participants were selected based on their interests and specializations, and the topic was discussed with all team members to determine the main activities for each delegate according to their role in the project.

The training was based on three core themes from the Turin camp: Project Explanation – Planning & Management – Communication.

There was a strong and enthusiastic response among the beneficiaries of this training program. Additionally, the centre benefits from both internal and external frameworks that are well-prepared to support its activities. Local and national media, TV channels, influencers, and electronic newspapers were informed and actively involved.

The program commenced with a presentation of the Enhance project by the project manager, followed by a detailed explanation of the training structure. Invitations were extended to beneficiaries, public institutions, media representatives, influencers, and stakeholders to raise awareness and promote local engagement—particularly among women and young women.

LOCAL ACTIVITIES IN EGYPT

SPAED delivered the toolkit to approximately 50 stakeholders, leveraging direct relationships and the association's 16-year presence in the region.

After the Turin training, we planned to share the materials with civil society organizations through bimonthly meetings, with presentations in Arabic to ensure effective communication. The initial outreach targeted young mothers, followed by community leaders who could further spread information.

Young women and community leaders have been invited to discuss the project and to participate in the local activities. The training lasted one day for each group and included discussions that enriched participant interactions. Stakeholders contacted include local government, NGOs, political parties, the local administration, and youth centres.

LOCAL ACTIVITIES IN JORDAN

The training engaged a diverse group of stakeholders, including representatives from charities, agricultural workers, health and social development directorates, the Governorate Council, members of the House of Representatives, and the Jordan Valley Environment Group. Thirty participants were contacted one week before the training—some via phone and others in person—to confirm their attendance and share preliminary details. Each participant was chosen based on their relevant skills and their potential to contribute effectively to the project's implementation.

Partners delivered a detailed presentation to stakeholders, introducing the project's objectives and strategic vision. This was followed by a workshop focused on business management and logistical tools, where participants received branded notebooks, pens, and medals featuring the project logo and a scannable barcode linking to the association's Facebook page, where all project updates are published.

WHAT'S NEXT?

In October 2025, ATIG and RJ4ALL Europe will lead the next CAMP in Morocco. Project managers, operators, educators, community leaders will travel to Tiznit, Morocco to attend the training session to learn how to use community engagement techniques. Partners will be given the possibility for meeting other local intercultural organizations that can be beneficial for the NON-EU partners.

Torino 23 May 2025 - Atig presenting the next workshop in Morocco, October 2025.
